Stamps were issued for Class 1, Class 2 and Class 3 contributions. The different classes can be identified by examining the shape of the value-lozenge. Class 1 is rectangular, class 2. is oval and class 3 diamond shaped. A few stamps had combinations of these if they were used by more than one class of contributor.

Class 3 Contributions

These have been attributed to the "non-employed". They were actually paid by such people as single women who stayed at home to look after invalid parents; persons with private incomes; divorced women who were unable to work because of commitments with children; single parents; persons working abroad for over twelve months; (not compulsory, stamps purchased by employer) and, students (not compulsory). They were also payable by persons who did not qualify for unemployment benefit and credited contributions; or persons who wished to make good their record if they had a deficiency in a particular year.

REPORT TO THE NATION

No. 20

July 5

THIS DAY MAKES HISTORY

Insurance and assistance to help in all the changes and chances of life, a free national health service for all—these are the great landmarks in British social progress which we have reached this month.

Who will pay for them? We must pay for them ourselves. Into the national insurance fund will flow contributions paid by those who are employed, by their employers, by those who are on their own, and sums of money paid by the Government out of the taxes collected from all of us. Out of it will flow the unemployment, sickness, widowhood and maternity benefits, and retirement pensions. The health service will be paid for almost entirely out of taxes. Taxation pays completely for national assistance and family allowances.

How will we pay for them? We must pay for them out of production. The cash benefits drawn by the unemployed, the ill and injured, and the old, are their claims on a part of the nation's production, even though they cannot add to that production themselves. When we put resources into the health service — doctors and nurses, bricks and mortar and power—it means we can't use them to increase output of goods.

So if we are to have these new benefits and all the goods we want too—well, then we've got to make more goods. And we ought to find that the freedom from anxiety that insurance will give and the better health resulting from the health service will help us to answer the call for

MORE AND MORE PRODUCTION

How the two schemes work

National Health Service

Provides all forms of medical advice and care, hospital and specialist services, medicines, drugs and appliances, as well as a family doctor.

Is available to everybody, whether insured or not, and there are no fees to pay.

You can use any part of it, or all of it, as you wish.

If you have not yet chosen your doctor, do so now; get an application form E.C.1 for each member of the family from Post Office or Public Library.

National Insurance Scheme

Provides cash benefits during sickness, injury, unemployment and widowhood; payments at childbirth and at death, and pensions for the industrially disabled and on retirement.

These benefits are available only to contributors and their families.

Contributions are compulsory for most people and cards must be stamped from July 5th on.

If you (or your employer for you) have not got a card yet, apply by filling in the form C.F.6 available at all Post Offices.

* NOTE 4d., 3/-, 3/6d., 4/11d., and 9/1d. stamps

The apparent discrepancy between the description and the actual colour of the value of these stamps is due to technical printing difficulties.

Opting out.

Widows and married women could opt out of the pensions portion of the contribution as they were covered by the husband's contributions. If they opted in they could receive a pension in their own right and not just a married couple's or widow's pension.

Exempt.

Those over retirement age or girls under 18 married or widowed were exempt from the pensions part of the contribution.

Contracting out of the Graduated Pension Scheme.

A graduated pension scheme was introduced in 1961 and was an attempt at providing an extra earnings-related pension on top of the basic state pension. Because many employer's schemes were considered adequate substitutes it was possible to Contract out of the Scheme. The scheme lasted until 1975.

Redundancy Payments Scheme

From 6th December 1966 employers were to make payments to employees with at least 2 years service who became redundant and satisfied certain conditions. Part of the cost was to be borne by a central fund to which all employers contributed, and from which they could reclaim the major part of any redundancy payments they made. The contributions were 5d per week for each man aged over 18 and 2d for each woman aged over 18. Employees did not pay.

Selective employment tax (SET)

This was a tax on 'non-productive workers' (i.e. a tax charged on selective occupations) that was introduced in 1966. Its effect was to increase shop workers' wage costs by 7 per cent, as it was the employer, not the employee, who paid the tax. SET made labour more expensive and, relatively speaking, capital investment cheaper. This encouraged many retailers (who were the largest employers of non-productive workers) to invest in capital systems (e.g. central checkout systems) that made them less reliant on labour. This gave a further push to the widespread introduction of self-service shopping. Such large investments meant that operators demanded larger, and quicker, turnover. Quicker turnover meant that consumer goods had a shorter shelf life, so they were fresher when purchased. Thus, indirectly, SET, helped the multiples to expand at the expense of their smaller competitors.
