EDITORIAL

This issue gives the opportunity to publish the results of research by Ray L. Woodward-Clarke on registration label numbering of the subordinate offices.

The first section deals with the offices within the places with a London District Post Code.

Those offices in the Home Counties but inside the 12+ mile boundary are in the second section.

DESIGNATION NUMBER ON REGISTRATION LABELS

Much of the information for the identification of the offices is derived from research by the late Alan Evans. He lived in Hastings and kept a series of notebooks, which he passed round to his philatelic friends to enter any information they had.

About 1977 he loaned the books for publication to the author.

When he died in 1986, he left his collection of registration labels and the notebooks to his friend Gordon Bittle-Britt.

Over the years since, additional information has been added.

Serially numbered registrations labels were brought into use in the United Kingdom on the 18th. February, 1907. They were issued in four types, known as patterns 'A'; 'B'; 'C' and 'D'.

1) 'A' labels were for use at Head Offices of large towns and districts. They were also for use at Post Offices of small towns where 3,000 or more packets were registered in each year and where there was only one Post Office. These labels had the name of the Post Office printed on them.

2) 'B' labels were for use at Branch Offices and Town Sub-Offices where 3,000 or more packets were registered each year. These labels were printed with the name of the town followed by a number which identified the Branch Office or Sub-Office. These designation numbers should not be confused with the serial numbers (usually preceded by 'No') which appear below the office name.

3) 'C' labels were for use at Branch Offices, Station Offices, Postmen's Offices and Town Sub-Offices where under 3,000 packets were registered each year. These labels were printed with the name of the town followed by a line. Before a supply of labels could be issued to an office of this class, the Head Office had to stamp the designation number of the sub-office on this line. For this purpose a special stamp with india rubber type was supplied but, in practice, the number was very often hand-written or typed in.

4) 'D' labels were for use at some offices in towns and villages where the number of packets registered was under 3,000 per year. These labels were not printed with an office name and had to be stamped with the office stamp, the labels being double the normal size to accommodate this. The postal clerk was supposed to remove any time or date slugs before stamping the labels but this was not always done.

This listing is concerned only with pattern 'B' and 'C' labels, those which bear a number identifying a subordinate office.

In addition to Post Offices, 'B' and 'C' labels could be supplied to certain firms and organizations. To qualify the firms had to use posting lists^A and post 1,000 or more registered packets per year. They affixed the labels and numbered the posting lists themselves. The firms were allotted a designation number in the same way as for post offices but this was normally a higher number than any of the subordinate post offices in the same town. 'B' labels were supplied to firms posting 2,000 or more registered packets per year: with under 2,000 packets, 'C' labels were issued.

Designation numbers had to be advised to the Secretary of the Post Office and could not be altered without his consent. In practice there was no need to alter the numbers but, occasionally, a number that had been given to a subordinate office which subsequently closed was later allocated to a newly opened office.

Initially not many offices used 'B' labels (just over 300 have been recorded) but from about August 1909 many of the existing users of 'C' labels had 'B' labels printed for their use (these new users of 'B' labels can be distinguished from the original users as there was a change in the format of the labels at this time).

Labels were printed in sheets from 1907 to early 1931 when the Post Office decided to change to printing in coil form.

With the advent of labels issued in rolls 'C' labels were discontinued and 'D' labels were for emergency use only. The Post Office Circular of 25th. March, 1931 gives the revised arrangements:-

- 1) 'A' labels (printed with the name of the Office) are used at Head Offices and at Country Sub-Offices.
- 2) 'B' labels (printed with the name of the Office followed by a designation number) are used at all other Offices, including Town Sub-Offices in towns or villages where there is a Country Sub-Office and also by firms supplied with Registration Labels.
- 3) 'D' labels (no printed name of Office) are used in cases of emergency only.

The London listing contains 1091 entries but it will be seen there are still many gaps in the number sequences where users have not been identified, thus giving scope for doing much more work on this subject. There are two ways in which users may be identified -

(a) Head Postmasters were required to keep a record of designation numbers for their area and this would appear to be an easy way to obtain the information. However, virtually all enquiries have led to a negative response on the grounds the information is confidential.

(b) As the postage stamps on registered letters are cancelled by the counter stamp of the receiving office, which also affixes the registration label, this has proved to be the most effective means of identification.

Designation numbers used by firms are more difficult to identify. Usually, by no means always, the designation numbers used by firms are higher than any used by a sub-office in the same town. If the designation number belongs to a post office, the return address on the back of letters handed in at that office will be nearly all different. If the designation number belongs to a firm, the the return address on the letter will always be the same firm for that particular number.

^A These were certificates of posting for registered letters where several were posted at one time. Originally they may have been loose forms but later they were bound into books of 100.

It would be much appreciated if readers would examine any registered covers in their possession and send identities for any designation numbers not appearing in this listing to the author at
